Interrupted and resumed again with little profit, the exploitation was finally abandoned in 1865. MARBLE. These are the only products of the mining industry of the region deserving of serious interest, and nature furnishes them with a profusion that avails little for an article so cumbrous to transport and so rarely demanded abroad. The precipitous flanks of the Valley of the Adize, from near Verona to the Austrian frontier and far beyond, furnish marbles of a beauty and variety of tint, from black and deep red to pale yellow, gray, and white, not found in any other locality. Of course all are not equally fine in quality, and some are inferior to similar types found elsewhere. The black, for instance, can not compare with the well-known Port Venere,...
