

Knowing How: Researching and Writing Nonfiction (Paperback)

By Mary C. McMackin, Barbara S. Siegel

Stenhouse Publishers, United States, 2002. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 251 x 201 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. When you assign a research report, do you hear groans of dismay? Audible groans from the students and your own internal groan, because you know that most of what you read, and have to grade, will be a lifeless string of facts, as devoid of the writer's voice as an encyclopedia entry? It doesn't have to be that way. Combining research with compelling writing is challenging for upper elementary and middle school students, but when done well reports embody the passion that every student brings to the subject she or he loves. Mary McMackin and Barbara Siegel sought a way to help students bring real vitality to this crucial assignment, to tap into their true interests, energies, and imagination, and to help students unlock the complex, nonlinear process of researching and reporting. To do this Mary and Barbara each chose a research topic and worked alongside Barbara's fifth graders at each stage of the research and writing process. In Knowing How, they demystify the research process and provide tools students need to shape their research into substantive, well-written...
