He became eager to comfort them. That showed a noble spirit in him. He had a warm, gentle heart. No one can ever be greatly useful in this world who does not enter into the world s experiences. Christ was moved with compassion when he saw human pain, sorrow and sin. At once his love went out to the sufferer and he desired to help and save. Wherever we go we see sad faces, telling of unrest, or broken peace, of unsatisfied longings, of unanswered questions, of deep heart-hungerings. Sometimes it is fear that writes its lines on the pale cheeks. Sometimes it is perplexity over tangled circumstances, which darkens the features. Sometimes it is baffled longing; sometimes it is unquenchable desire to know the future; sometimes it is eagerness to learn more of God. We are sent to be interpreters, each in our own way, and in the things that we know. When we think of it we see that all the rich knowledge of the world has come through God s interpreters. Along all the ages seers have been climbing to the mountain-tops, where the first light breaks, catching the divine meanings in God s writings, and then interpreting them to others. There have been prophets in every age, gifted to look into the scrolls of truth and read off the words and their meaning. The scientific knowledge we have to-day has come through many interpreters who have learned...
